ENTANGLEMENTS AND DETACHMENTS IN GLOBAL POLITICS

EDITORS' WELCOME

Dear colleagues and friends,

Welcome to the Millennium 2020 Online Conference and thank you for being here. We are beyond excited and honoured to be hosting these conversations and we are sure that the next few days will be full of generative encounters and engagements.

In a period of uncertainty for so many reasons we are grateful to have this opportunity to connect and build a community together that can ask what it means to be entangled, and detached, in the worlds that we live in.

A huge thank you to all of the speakers who are sharing their work over the course of the conference, and to everyone who has created this conference. We are grateful to the many thinkers, colleagues, and friends whose work has fed into the dialogues, whether through generous conversations or the generosity of their writing. Especially thank you to everyone who gave us their time to talk through these themes. Thank you to the team at Millennium, and especially to Atharva and Elena for their work, commitment and creativity in making this possible.

To everyone who's here and everyone whose work has influenced the conference, welcome, and we look forward to thinking with you over the next few days.

Yours warmly,

Alice Engelhard, Andy Li and Enrike van Wingerden

CONFERENCE THEME

International Relations is concerned with the connections that constitute lived political realities. The present moment is marked by an unprecedented awareness of the intra-relations and ruptures at the core of social and political life. The ongoing global pandemic, anti-racist protests and struggles against environmental degradation have laid bare the need for connected understandings of global politics. This conference is a call to push existing approaches to global (dis)connectivity, heterogeneity and shared vulnerabilities further by attuning to the entanglements of societies, species and environments, as well as acknowledging the ways of being that are foreclosed when entangled realities materialise.

We invite theoretical, ethical and empirical engagements with entanglements and detachments, as well as understudied connections and disconnections. Through the notion of 'entanglement' we invite conversation on the messy, layered connections that constitute our worlds. 'Detachment' explores the limits of entanglement, by pointing to the disparity between different life worlds, species, objects and subjects not only as outcomes of opposing power structures or connections yet to be drawn but also as separations. By thinking together about entanglements and detachments, we invite reflection on the ethics of (dis)connecting, or connecting differently, with other forms of life and matter in global politics

The 2020 Millennium Conference will engage with questions on entanglements and detachments, including, but not limited to:

- How are seemingly separate worlds and histories entangled with one another?
- How can we study entanglements and how are researchers entangled with their objects of study?
- What is not or should not be entangled in global politics?
- What are the politics and ethics of detachment?
- What are the routes and mechanisms by which people, objects and ideas become entangled and detached?
- How do entangled ontologies shift debates about emancipation and (non-human) agency?
- How are entities entangled along routes that are understudied in IR, including 'South-South' connections?
- How do entanglements of power exceed existing critiques?

CALL FOR SPECIAL CONFERENCE ISSUE

Millennium: Journal of International Studies is edited entirely by postgraduate students. It is committed to publishing provocative critical scholarship concerned with the politics of the international. It welcomes contributions from a variety of theoretical perspectives which challenge dominant narratives, regularly publishes the work of research students and early-career researchers as well as from established scholars. Please do send your manuscripts to us for consideration in one of our regular issues, published twice a year.

A selection of contributions from the conference will be published as part of a special issue in Millennium: Journal of International Studies vol. 49 (3). If you would like your work to be considered for this issue, please submit it via the ScholarOne online system by midnight (UK time) on 30 November 2020. Traditional manuscripts should be up to 12,000 words. We welcome different forms of engagement with the conference theme, so if you would like to submit another type of contribution, feel free to email millennium@lse.ac.uk to discuss it with us.
